Social and Personal

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. White, of Townsville, N. C., announce the engagement of their daughter, Sara, to the son of Samuel Oran Inge. The wedding will be celebrated on June 19 at the home of the bride's parents, in Townsville, Albemarle County.

One of the most interesting and delightful gatherings of smart society in Albemarle County these days is a dear little inn, by name "The Sign of the Green Teardrop," near Yancey's Mill. It is as picturesque as an old tavern fresh from a Dickens novel, and it has become the most interesting and fashionable place for week-ends here in Albemarle to motor to this little inn for dinners and luncheons and afternoon tea. It will be continued throughout the summer months, and bids fair to be the most interesting and fashionable little tearoom of the season. Several parties for week-ends have already been arranged for in June, when some Richmond people will motor from this city to the quaint little place, John Powell's Rectory.

Last Tuesday night, in the grounds of the Chester Hotel, John Powell's Rectory was given. It was a moonlight recital, and a large audience was gathered beneath the cathedral arches of the giant oaks and the flood of light of the moon, the bright-colored lanterns and flower-scented garlands made it one of the most fairy

FORMER QUEEN SAYS REPORT IS ABSURD

No Truth in Story That She Is to Wed Man Many Years Her Junior.

BY LA MARQUE DE FONTENAY.
QUEEN MARIE AMELIE of Portugal has issued through her private secretary an emphatic denial, dated from her residence at Wimbledon, near London, of the story, according to which she is determined upon marrying Count Vasconcelos, one of the Royalist leaders in Portugal, and a man many years her junior. The denial runs as follows:

"It is hardly necessary to contradict the absurd statement in which Marie Amelie is not a single word of truth, the mischievous aim of the report being self-evident."

It is only right that this should be known on this side of the Atlantic, owing to the wide publicity of the cable dispatches from Europe to the effect that the Queen, who is the daughter of the late Comte de Paris, and a sister of the Duke of Orleans, Montpensier, had quarreled with her only son, King Manuel, about the matter.

Last summer I had occasion to deny in these letters the stories widely printed on both sides of the Atlantic, to the effect that the then Crown Prince, and his wife, sister of the Kaiser, had separated for good and all time, and were contemplating divorce. These denials may be said to have received confirmation within the last fortnight, by the Queen of Greece giving birth at Athens to a princess.

The King and Queen have five other children, two girls and three boys, the eldest of whom, Crown Prince George, is twenty-three years of age, and the second, Prince Constantine, is twelve years of age. Both have taken an active part in the recent war with Turkey. Crown Prince, indeed, being wounded, though not dangerously. The King and Queen of Greece have been married twenty-four years, and their silver wedding is celebrated on the day of the birth of their youngest child.

That Queen Sophia is devoted to her husband is perhaps best shown by the profound resentment which she still manifests to this day against those military and naval officers and politicians who were responsible for the removal of the then crown prince from the army, and for his virtual exile from Greece three years ago; an exile from which, after the overthrow of the military and naval junta, he was recalled by the people, who, as Mr. Smith, for all the officers and politicians concerned have benefited by the amnesty, Queen Sophia absolutely refuses to recognize them in any way or to admit them to her presence, and has refused to receive them or to sympathize on the occasion of the assassination of King George remained without any response on her part. She neither forgets nor forgives the indignities placed upon her husband, which looks, to say the least, as if she is fond of him.

Presidents of the French republic are decidedly unfortunate in their sons-in-law, and it is a matter for congratulation to his countrymen that this present monarch of the nation, Raymond Poincare, is a childless. When Armand Fallieres was elected President of the French republic, he took a distant relative of his wife to the Elisee with him as secretary-general. His name was Jean Lannes, and he had been a soldier, and was conspicuous for all those oddities of manner and bearing characteristic of the Gascons. He was totally unfitted for the place, and by his alternate whims, which were recognized by many of his friends and well-wishers, to such an extent that they went away, determined never again to cross the threshold of the Elisee Palace, and filled with resentment against its master.

Lannes, however, made up for his deficiencies as chief secretary by devoting himself to the homely thirty-five-year-old daughter of his chief, and secured her hand.

By that time President Fallieres had been elected to the presidency, and Lannes, as a secretary, and had, moreover, been warned, not only by friends, but also publicly by the press, that if he retained the man under his roof as son-in-law, he would expose himself to the same danger as President Fallieres, whose downfall and compulsory resignation were brought about by the fact that his son-in-law, Daniel Wilson, living with him at the Elisee, had made it his headquarters for all his financial intrigues, and for his questionable deals in connection with the bestowal of the Legion of Honor.

Accordingly, Fallieres, besides paying his daughter a dowry of 500,000 francs, appointed Lannes to the extremely lucrative post of treasurer-general, that is to say, collector of internal revenue of the metropolitan district of Paris, with headquarters at Versailles, and a salary of $20,000 a year.

The appointment, gazetted on the wedding day, gave rise to no end of criticism, by reason of the fact that Lannes had no fiscal experience whatsoever, that he was pitchforked into the office over the heads of many hundreds of deserving men connected with the treasury department, who were in the line of promotion, and that there was absolutely no ground for his receiving the post, save his marriage to the elderly and plain daughter of the President.

At first Lannes was very devoted to his wife. But when President Fallieres's term of office was drawing to a close, and he had made it absolutely clear that he would not, under any circumstances, accept re-election: when, moreover, Lannes found that

BANKING REFORM
STILL UNDER CONSIDERATION
Wilson Discusses Prospects of Legislation With Currency Leaders.
Washington, May 21.—President Wilson had three conferences to-day with currency reform. He discussed with Senator Kern prospects of currency legislation at this session of Congress, and learned that attention had been so sharply focused on the tariff that there was no agreement in sight as yet as to the advisability of banking reform.

The President talked with Chairman Owen of the National Banking and Currency Committee, early in the day and later with Representative Glass, probable chairman of the House Banking Committee. He was merely inquiring into the progress being made. Indications are that within another week a bill will be completed, the fundamentals of which will have administrative approval.

Senator McAdoo had a short conference late to-day with Senators Burton and Weeks. Senator Burton was a member of the Finance Committee and Senator Weeks is a member of the Banking and Currency Committee. It was understood Mr. McAdoo discussed currency legislation.

The Senate Currency Committee is scheduled to meet to-day, and Chairman Owen and other members are preparing the list of questions to be submitted to bankers and financial experts.

Although many Senators believe currency legislation at the special session is impossible, the committee is growing that a determined effort may be expected to put a bill through both houses.

INSPECT SUMMER HOTELS
Inspector Named by State Board of Health for Special Duty.
In an effort to see that all the summer hotels of the State are in a thoroughly sanitary condition when they open to receive guests, the State Board of Health yesterday named C. W. Holland, of Accomac County, as a temporary inspector, and dispatched him on a special survey of the resorts which come under the hotel law.

Dr. E. K. Flanagan, the regular inspector of the State Board of Health, has been busy with special school inspection. He is, however, now making his usual annual visitations, but he will be unable to see persons at all the hotels soon to open for the summer months are in a proper condition. Mr. Holland, while assisting Dr. Flanagan during the summer months, will be able promptly to visit these hotels and to inspect their sanitary arrangements.

"The board is anxious," reads the bulletin issued yesterday, "to guarantee a standard of sanitation in the hotels that make a specialty of the summer trade; and we hope to see that all of them are in such a condition that the health of guests will be fully protected. Our staff is strictly limited and we cannot hope to visit the average hotel more than once during the season. Accordingly, we urge guests who find unsanitary conditions at hotels to notify the board in order that these may be corrected at once."

V. M. I. CORPS ENDS LONG HIKE

Cadets Enthusiastic Over Five Days' Outing in Mountains of Virginia.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
Lexington, Va., May 21.—The corps of cadets, under command of the commandant, marched into Lexington to-day at noon, after a five-days' hike through the mountains. The band met the corps at the outskirts of town and played it back to barracks to the tunes of "Dixie" and "When Johnny Comes Marching Home." As the cadets passed down Main Street their step was as springy as if on parade, in spite of the fact that they had had five days of strenuous marching and camp life. The hike was a great success from every point of view. Leaving Lexington last Saturday, they proceeded to Kerr's Creek, where the first camp was pitched. Sunday was spent at the Rock-bridge Alum Springs, where the marching was a great success from every point of view. The cadets are enthusiastic over their outing, and are already laying plans for next year. Each company was working for a good record, trying to see which would have the fewest men to fall out. As a result of this spirit of the 250 men on the march, only four rode in the ambulance. To-day the battalion is back in barracks under the usual routine. Friday review examinations begin, to last until June 24.
